Career

On becoming England Captain in 2004, Lawrence set about motivating and educating his team, as always leading by example and inspiring others in both words and actions. His ability to communicate effectively and to encourage others was ideal for this role and the skills which he honed in his time as captain are key to his success as a motivational speaker. Lawrence retired from professional rugby in 2008 but remains one of the most iconic players of all time. He often appears in the media to discuss his career and the importance of sport. He now devotes much of his own time to the Dallaglio Foundation, an organisation he founded in 2009 with the aim of raising money for charities he supports. As of 2012, the Foundation began a Rugby Programme to help young people gain skills and confidence.

Lawrence Dallaglio grew up in West London and attended boarding school before studying at Kingston University. Despite his qualification in Property Development, he chose to pursue the sport which had been his passion from a young age rugby.
