

Nigel Lawson

Former chancellor of the Exchequer

An internationally renowned authority on the complex matter of economic policy, Nigel Lawson was Chancellor of the Exchequer under Margaret Thatcher between 1983 and 1989.

Nigel's biography

About Nigel Lawson

He was the MP for Blaby in Leicestershire for almost two decades, before retiring from the role in 1992. As founding chairman of the Global Warming Policy Foundation, Lawson demonstrates his desire to help update and strengthen financial systems for an ever changing world.

As a speaker, he applies his knowledge and enthusiasm to the needs of his client, sharing his experiences and expectations of economic influences in the UK and throughout the world.

- Former Chancellor of the Exchequer
- Founding Chairman of the Global Warming Policy Foundation
- Former Conservative MP for Blaby
- Author of the bestselling An Appeal to Reason: A Cool Look at Global Warming

Speaking Style

Utilising his experience and awareness of the UK, European and global economy, Lawson is straight-talking, honest and engaging as he guides listeners towards appropriate financial decisions for the future. His ability as a speaker have seen him become a highly regarded and much sought after speaker for clients from numerous sectors.

